

5. Explain how heat is transferred by convection.

Ans. Convection is the movement of heat in liquids and gases. The particles in liquids and gases are not tightly packed together and they are free to move around. When they are heated, their atoms gain kinetic energy and move faster to take place the particles that has less energy. Convection is said to take place and heat is transferred from hot areas to cold areas.