KEYMACRO lets you define keystrokes and key combinations and assign them to macros and hotkeys. The use of macros enables you to avoid repetition in your keystrokes, and you can edit the list of macros by creating new keystrokes and replacing them with a hotkey. You can also make custom keystrokes on your own, and use the existing ones in the macro list. And it also gives you the possibility to create separate sets of macros. This allows you to have two different keystrokes, for example, to play or stop the music. Keymacro can be used for game development. For example, you can use it to create keyboard shortcuts for saving, loading, and quitting the game. It comes packed with different keystrokes such as Ctrl+S, space, Home, End, Del, Ctrl+N, Ctrl+F, End, Ctrl+C, and Ctrl+G, and also makes it possible to assign them to hotkeys by creating macro combinations, as well as for opening a new tab, closing a tab, opening a new line, or closing a line. KEYMACRO has a user-friendly interface that makes it easy to use, and comes packed with a large list of keystrokes. LOGVIEW Description: LOGVIEW is a program designed to show all the actions performed by your system during the execution of the program, as well as what is happening when you press keystrokes on your keyboard, pause, stop, and so on. It can be used to troubleshoot applications and fix errors. And it can be helpful when debugging, especially when the error can't be reproduced. The LOGVIEW program can be used for creating shortcuts, hotkeys, macros, and for doing simple text editing, and many more. LOGVIEW comes with different utility programs that enable you to specify the frequency of the logging and filter the logs according to their contents. It comes packed with many useful utilities such as logging view, logging chart, logging images, logging serial port, and so on.
