The Open Financial Exchange (OFX) file format enables the exchange of financial information between software applications, and also with other formats. OFX is a standard by the Financial Services Standards Board of the Financial Services Development Forum. OFX is a text file format for exchanging financial information that can be read and written by multiple programs and functions. All transactions are in the format of text files. This enables different applications to exchange data with each other. In the current version of OpenOffice, you must use a special OFX import wizard. But now, you can use the command line version of CSV2OFX, a small tool that generates OFX files directly from a CSV file. The tool does not require the use of the OFX Import Wizard, which may require the conversion of the imported data. With CSV2OFX, you can convert and export data from an Excel spreadsheet into OFX files. The conversion is done by simply entering the CSV data and specifying an output folder. If you want to add a new column to the OFX file, it will be automatically added by CSV2OFX.
